

4. Kingscliff Police Station

In Cudgen Headland's early years, the town was policed from Murwillumbah, Tumbulgum and Tweed Heads. Kingscliff's growing population in the 1950s led to the establishment of a one-man police station, first in a home on Kingscliff hill, and later at the station's present site in Marine Parade. The station has received increases in manning levels in recent years, and plays a strategic role in the Tweed/Byron Local Area Command.

5. Wommin Bay Memorial Board Walk, at the end of Murphy's Road was officially opened in April 2007 as a memorial to Australian servicemen and women, and as an accessible wheelchair-access beach look-out for residents of the nearby Wommin Bay Village Retirement Community. Excellent views of the ocean, Fingal, Cook Island and the Kingscliff sea wall are obtainable from the look-out.

6. Wommin Bay Road first opened in 1926, provided readier access from Chinderah to Cudgen at a time when more district people were acquiring vehicles, and there was also the first arrival of visiting motorists, many from Queensland. The superb Walter Peate Recreation Reserve at the beach end of the road serves many local and district sporting bodies. It was created by Tweed Shire Council, with the generous assistance of sand mining companies.

Points of Interest

1. Cudgen Headland Surf Life Saving Club was founded in January 1922 at a time when Cudgen Headland was attracting increasing numbers of bathers, especially during public holidays. Two years later in January 1924 a bathing shed and pavilion was officially opened in conjunction with the new Wommin Bay Road (today's Marine Parade). By 1934 the Club had 67 members, many of them local and Tweed Valley farmers' sons. That year, thanks to public support, they were able to purchase their first surf boat "Cudgen 1". A small club house was erected in 1934. However in 1948 an ex-Air Force hut from Evans Head RAAF base was added. The Club's future changed in 1963 when it moved from the Queensland-based Point Danger Branch to the Far North Coast NSW Branch. In 1966 a new, modern brick club house building was officially opened by Sir Adrian Curlewis, and remains the nucleus of the present-day club. Cudgen Headland Club proudly hosted the 1977/78 Australian Championships, which attracted 3,882 competitors and a Sunday attendance of 25,000. The Club remains a vital Kingscliff institution, helping to ensure the safety of the town's beaches during the holiday season.

2. Kingscliff Bowls Club was established as the Cudgen Headland and District Bowling Club in 1949 as a result of a meeting of 17 local men. A special lease with the NSW State Government was obtained for the leasehold of public land, which is the site of the present-day clubhouse. The original leasehold fee was three shillings for an indefinite period.

In 1951 the bowling green was completed and over the years many improvements have been made, including extensions, the construction of new buildings and the acquisition of further leasehold Crown land. Since 1973 the Club has acquired a regional and national reputation for the quality of its catering, whilst the introduction of poker machines has proved a valuable source of income. The Club has also acquired a wide reputation as a favourite all-weather green, with the "Classic Pairs" Tournament, first introduced in 1973, now regarded as the richest bowls competition for women in Australia. Now known as the Kingscliff Beach Club, a major new club house building was erected in 1994/5, and improvements and extensions have continued since that date.

3. Planting of Norfolk Island Pines

In 1956, avenues of three year old Norfolk Island pines and numerous coconut palms were planted by the Lions Club, Kingscliff Progress Association and local residents, to provide shade at the foreshore caravan park. These trees stretched from Marine Parade, Kingscliff North (formerly Wommin Bay) to the bowling green and beyond.
