URBAN BUSHLAND

Urban bushland such as the Pottsville Environment Park is an important part of the modern Australian landscape.

Urban bushland can be accessed easily and often, deepening our connection with the natural environment, and providing a respite from busy modern life.

Being home to an abundance of native plants and animals, urban bushland also has its own intrinsic value, meaning it is important for its own sake regardless of human values.

Healthy urban bushland relies on an active and responsible community to protect it from pressures such as weed encroachment, roaming cats and dogs, pest animals, rubbish dumping, fires and general degradation from inappropriate use.
